DISCIPLINE: POLITICAL SCIENCE (ELECTIVE)

COURSE INSTRUCTOR: SUCHARITA SEN

CREDITS: 3

Course Objective:

The course will introduce students to the study of comparative politics which is one of the main sub-fields of political science. The course introduces students to different theoretical approaches and methodologies that are used in this field in order to study developed and developing societies. This course intends to equip students with the key tools that are used in comparative analysis in order to form a more nuanced understanding of the social, political and economic nature of political conflicts that grip world politics today. The course will use major schools of thought to explore what democracy and authoritarianism means based on how it is carried out by states today, as well as why some countries are more democratic than others. We will also explore social movements, the causes of political violence and revolutions, and state collapse and reconstruction.
